Abstract

This document catalogues over 500 resources available to support putting health services delivery transformations into practice. The resources include tools, guides, frameworks, cases and databases, among others, that can be applied to support efforts including: understanding and defining concepts; planning actions; ensuring consistency and quality; gathering and reporting on evidence; and/or learning and exchanging information. The identified resources are logged according to the domains, areas for action and key strategies set out in the European Framework for Action on Integrated Health Services Delivery. The catalogued resources have been identified through a series of topic-specific reviews as well as country case studies carried out by the Health Services Delivery Programme of the Division of Health Systems and Public Health at the WHO Regional Office for Europe. The catalogue has also benefited from expert recommendations. The list of resources is not exhaustive but rather illustrates how different resources complement and can be used in line with the European Framework for Action on Integrated Health Services Delivery.

Principal contributors

The principal contributors of resources catalogued include the authors of published and unpublished topic-specific reviews conducted in the context of developing the European Framework for Action on Integrated Health Services Delivery. This includes the following individuals, recognized according to topics reviewed: Lourdes Ferrer, International Foundation for Integrated Care (population empowerment and patient engagement); Mary Jo Monk, Nova Scotia Department of Health and Wellness (health services delivery); Esther Suter and Sara Mallinson, Alberta Health Services (accountability arrangements); Kai Leichsenring, European Centre for Social Welfare Policy and Research (incentives); Liesbeth Borgermans, Vrije Universiteit Brussel, and Margrieta Langins, WHO Regional Office for Europe (workforce competencies); and Nick Goodwin, International Foundation for Integrated Care (change management). Viktoria Stein, International Foundation for Integrated Care, oversaw the coordination of these works in their initial stages. Aliya Kosbayeva, WHO Regional Office for Europe, contributed to final revisions of an advanced version of the document.

Other contributors

Valuable inputs were also gleaned from country case profiles documented in the report “Lessons from transforming health services delivery: compendium of initiatives in the WHO European Region”.<sup>1</sup> The contributors to these cases are duly noted at the outset of the document.

Preface

In the WHO European Region, Member States share a timeless commitment to strengthen health systems for health and development. This commitment was marked by the 1996 Ljubljana Conference on reforming health care and reaffirmed by the 2008 Tallinn Charter on health and development. More recently, strengthening people-centred health systems, including revitalized public health functions and capacity, was recognized as one of four priority areas in the European policy framework, Health 2020<sup>2</sup>, which set out a course of action for achieving the Region's greatest health potential by the year 2020. The importance of people-centred health systems has also been signaled globally, marked by the adoption of a global framework for integrated, people-centred services delivery at the Sixty-ninth World Health Assembly in May 2016.<sup>3</sup>

The vision put forward by Health 2020 for people-centred health systems extends the same principles of equity, social justice, community participation, health promotion, the appropriate use of resources and intersectoral action as outlined in the 1978 Declaration of Alma-Ata. The continuity of these principles extends a primary health care approach as critical for health systems to make significant progress towards universal health coverage, while contributing to improved health outcomes, economic and social development and wealth creation.

In line with this collective priority and the implementation of Health 2020, the WHO Regional Office for Europe has worked to highlight specific entry points for strengthening people-centred health systems. At the 65th session of the WHO Regional Committee for Europe, Member States endorsed priorities for health systems strengthening in the European Region for the period 2015–2020 in resolution EUR/RC65/R5, making health services delivery transformations one of the two priority areas of work for the Office.<sup>4</sup>

In recent years, the WHO Regional Office for Europe has worked to respond to the call of Member States for evidence-based policy options on how to transform services delivery. This has included a number of topic-specific reviews, exploring the available evidence and work to-date to strengthen health services. As a key milestone in this process, a European Framework for Action on Integrated Health Services Delivery will be put forward to Member States at their 66th session of the Regional Committee for Europe in September 2016.

The catalogue at hand brings together tools and resources that support the Framework for Action's implementation. It does so by cataloguing an inventory of examples and options for change agents to take on the process of undertaking services delivery transformations. Importantly, the listed resources are merely examples, designed as a practical resource for getting started.

Moving forward with implementation, the new WHO European Centre for Primary Health Care based in Almaty, Kazakhstan, sets out to support Member States to put the Framework for Action into practice. Generating topic-specific policy research, studying country experiences, strengthening technical capacity and networking partners across the Region, the Centre and its multi-professional team serve as a hub of resources and expertise for implementation, aiming ultimately to accelerate health system strengthening and improvements towards the Region's health goals.

About this catalogue

This catalogue is a working document, indexing resources to support services delivery transformations. The resources listed here have been identified in the process of developing the European Framework for Action on Integrated Health Services Delivery. The catalogue itself will continue to be expanded and refined. Readers are encouraged to contribute to this process by contacting the Health Services Delivery Programme with additional examples to be considered. To submit, contact: EUCIHSD@who.int.

This catalogue has been developed as part of the implementation package for the European Framework for Action on Integrated Health Services Delivery (hereafter, Framework for Action). The Framework for Action is itself a resource for undertaking health services delivery transformations. By adopting an outcome-oriented, systems-based approach, it identifies and sequences a priority list of key areas that call for attention to transform services delivery; hence, termed areas for action. The areas are organized in four domains, accounting for the interactions and interdependencies inherent to undertaking services delivery transformations (see Fig. 1).

The Framework for Action’s four domains set out to identify population and individual needs for transformations focused on improving outcomes with people at the centre of services. To do so, it recognizes adjustments in services delivery processes are needed to match and respond to those most pertinent health needs and determinants and that this entails aligning the other functions of health systems in order to support the system conditions required for new services delivery processes. A fourth, cross-cutting property, calls focus to managing changes purposefully across stages of strategizing, implementing and sustaining transformations.

Aims

This catalogue complements the Framework for Action by providing examples of available resources for each area and key strategy put forward as a priority for transforming services delivery. In doing so, the catalogue serves as an inventory of organized and documented options, as examples to assist change agents in navigating services delivery transformations with both a prioritized list of areas and the know-how for putting change into practice.

The development of the catalogue has ultimately been guided by the following three key aims:

- 1. To identify relevant examples. Further to the key strategies identified for each area, the catalogue breaks down these strategies into specific examples. While the examples are not exhaustive, these serve to suggest specific ways in which efforts can be directed to activate change.
- 2. To catalogue known resources. Resources included in the catalogue range from tools, guides and frameworks to databases and networks among other varieties. In documenting a wide range of resources, the catalogue offers a menu of options for undertaking transformations and serves as a go-to resource to support efforts.
- 3. To set a basis for further development. Documenting over 500 resources, the catalogue is a testament to the vast amount of available material on services delivery. Nonetheless, the number of examples and possible resources is endless. As a first effort to document and consolidate resources, further work will continue to expand and improve upon the inventory of options to enrich this first working version of the catalogue.

Process of identifying resources

The primary sources of evidence and process for collecting resources included the following:

- Topic-specific scoping reviews. At the outset of developing the Framework for Action, a series of targeted, topic-specific reviews were conducted. These reviews, developed by experts in their respective fields, were launched to first explore the range of literature, evidence and experiences on topics pertinent to the Framework for Action, including for example, services delivery, the health workforce, patient engagement and population empowerment.
- Field evidence. As part of the development of the Framework for Action, a series of descriptive case studies on initiatives to transform health services delivery from all 53 Member States of the WHO European Region were developed. Through a horizontal analysis across cases, those processes, tools and other resources most commonly activated were extracted. These findings have been incorporated throughout the catalogue. The cases in full and key lessons learned can be accessed for further details (see: Lessons from transforming health services delivery: Compendium of initiatives in the WHO European Region).
- Technical experts and partners. Through a snowballing of recommendations, technical experts, namely staff of WHO technical programmes, were solicited to provide input on other relevant sources of resources. The work of development partners and other organizations active in services delivery and known to the experts engaged, were also reviewed.

All resources were assessed for inclusion based on their alignment with the overarching vision of the Framework for Action and its areas for action. Importantly, the catalogue has not attempted an exhaustive search. Only resources available in English were considered. Priority was given to European based work, coming to the exclusion of efforts in other parts of the world. The resources described are a subset of all available resources and many may apply to multiple strategies. In this document, each resource has been aligned to only one strategy. In this way, the catalogue attempts rather to serve as a resource for starting out a transformation process.

How to use this catalogue

Resources identified have been catalogued according to the structure of the Framework for Action as described in Table 1. The application of these categories has served to organize the available resources for their indexing according to defined codes for the types of resources identified; the examples and resources themselves are listed in a non-specified order. A full overview of domains, areas and key strategies put forward by the Framework for Action can be found in the section ‘Overview: sections of catalogue.’

Table 1. Organization of resources identified

Domains	Areas for action	Key strategies	Examples	Resources
Four core pillars of transformations, organized to put people first, in alignment with services and systems, recognizing change management as a cross-cutting property of transformations.	High-leverage properties that call for strategic action to activate changes. Areas for action are aligned to each domain of the Framework and represent the most pertinent areas for work.	Specific directions of work to be considered in identifying and planning improvements to be achieved in each area.	A subset of possible actions signalling those known efforts that can be activated, each accompanied by illustrative resources. Note: examples are not exhaustive.	Examples of known supports including tools, guides, frameworks, cases, and databases, among others.

In an effort to support interpretation and application of each, the resources have been clustered into groups that reflect their primary objectives: to assist in defining concepts and developing actions; to promote consistency and quality; to gather and disseminate information and evidence; and to support education and learning. This clustering of resources is described in Table 2.

The different examples of each type of resource have been assigned numbers to capture their primary objective. This coding of examples has been applied to index the resources. All resources documented here can be found online using the citation provided.
